

▼ Parent, spouse, de facto or child of a New Zealand citizen + Twisty...

A New Zealand citizen residing in Australia is considered an 'Australian resident' under the Health Insurance Act 1973. New Zealanders are not required to hold a Permanent visa and are eligible for Medicare.

Ministerial order No. 805 allows a parent, spouse, de facto or child (non-New Zealand citizen) of an eligible New Zealand citizen (residing in Australia) who has applied for permanent residency and their visa condition does not give permission to work, to be eligible for Medicare.

Eligibility for Medicare

A parent, spouse, de facto or child of an eligible New Zealand citizen residing in Australia, who has applied for permanent residency and has permission to work is eligible when they:

- - hold a valid temporary visa
 - have a continuing application for permanent residency with permission to work, and
 - reside in Australia

These applications are no different to any other applicant for permanent residency.

A parent, spouse, de facto or child of an eligible New Zealand citizen residing in Australia, who has applied for permanent residency and has no permission to work is eligible when they:

- - hold a valid temporary visa
 - have a continuing application for permanent residency with no permission to work
 - reside in Australia, and
 - can provide a document confirming evidence of a relationship with the eligible New Zealand citizen

A parent, spouse, de facto or child of an eligible New Zealand citizen residing in Australia, who has not applied for permanent residency is not eligible for Medicare unless they were previously residing:

- in New Zealand, or
- a country under a Reciprocal Health Care Agreement (RHCA) and can meet the country's RHCA eligibility criteria

Note: eligible customers covered under the RHCA with New Zealand are not enrolled in Medicare and do not get a Medicare card.

For more details about RHCA and eligibility criteria, see Reciprocal Health Care Agreements.

See also:

- Applicants for permanent residency eligibility for Medicare
- Document types for Medicare eligibility and enrolment
- Medicare eligibility for New Zealand citizens

The Resources page contains legislation relevant to a spouse, parent or child of a New Zealand citizen for the purposes of Medicare eligibility.

s22 (out of scope)